The Upper Peninsula of Michigan faces unique mining and housing challenges shaped by remote geography, aging infrastructure, workforce fluctuations, and limited development resources. Join mining industry leaders, housing advocates, and policy experts to examine the realities of sustaining safe, affordable, and community-focused growth across this rural region.

- Hear panel updates on mining efforts from local companies
- Learn about housing developments across the region
- Network with economic and workforce professionals

The session will highlight solution-oriented discussions on how to strengthen the mining workforce pipeline, expand housing availability, and support long-term economic stability for U.P. communities.
